I conjure you to consider, moreover, that England, without waiting for, and I am sure, without expeca vast web of ocean steam navigation, based on postage and commerce, that will connect all the European ports, all our own ports, all the South American ports, all the ports in the West Indies, all the ports of Asia and Oceanica, with her great commercial capital. , Thus the world is to become a great commercial system, ramified by a thousand nerves projecting from the one head at London. Yet, stupenduous as the scheme is, our own merchants, conscious of equal capacity and equal resources, and relying on experience for success, stand here beseeching us to allow them to counteract its fulfilment, and ask of us facilities and aid equal to these yielded by

While our commercial history is full of presages of successful competition. Great Britain is sunk deep in debt. We are free from debt. Great Britain is oppressed with armies and costly aristocratic institutions; industry among us is unfettered and free. But it is a contest depending not on armies, nor even on wealth, but chiefly on invention and industry -And how stands the national account in these renavigation, and electric communication-these are old achievements. England only a year ago invited the nations to bring their inventions and compare them together in a palace of iron and glass. In all the devices for the increase of luxury and indulgence, America was surpassed, not only by refined England and by chivalrous France. but even by semi barbarian Russia. Not until after all the mortification which such a result necessarily produced, did the comparison of utilitarian inventions begin. Then our countrymen exhibited Dick's anti-friction press -a machine that raised a power greater by 240 tons than could be raised by the Brama hydraulic press. which, having been used by Sir John Stevenson in erecting the tabular bridge over the straits of Menai, had been brought forward by the British artisans as a contrivance of unrivalled merit for the generation

Next was submitted, on our behalf, the two inventions of St. John, the variation compass, which indicates the deflection of its own needle at any place, resulting from local causes; and the velocimeter, which tells, at any time, the actual speed of the vessel bearing it, and its distance from the port of departure-inventions adopted at once by the admiralty of Great Britain. Then, to say nothing of the ingeniously constructed locks invented by Hobbs, which defied the skill of the British artisans, while subscriber, agent for John Iver McMillan, takes this he opened all of theirs at pleasure, there was Bigewas acknowledged to be a contribution to the agriculture of England, surpassing in value the cost of

I feel quite assured that their enterprise will be adequate to the glorious converance on the part of their government. I do not know that we shall prevail in that conflict, but for myself, like the modest hero who was instructed to charge on the artillery at Niagara. I can say that we "will try;" and that when a difficulty occurs no greater than that which meets us now, my motta shall be the words of the dying commander of the > Judicial Discretion. The following incident (says the Fayetteville Observer) is related in a very well written and interesting biographical sketch of our townsman, Judge number of Livingston's Law Magazine: "On one occasion, a young man was indicted and tried before him for an aggravated assault. But he was young; and acted violently to avenge the real or supposed wrongs of a father; and there was that in his countenance and demeanor that marked a spirit that imprisonment might render desperate, but could never quell. The Judge felt the responsibility of his position; that he might now, by a single act, est miniature, together with a very large assortment of fix the destiny of no ordinary man. He was anxious to maintain the sanctity of the law, and yet save, if possible, its victim from ruin. After some hesitation, he declined to imprison, but imposed a considwhich produces proofs which cannot but please the most fas-tidious He has also a fine assortment of Gold Lockets. Pins, erable pecuniary fine, gave the youth some good advice, and dismissed him. That man has since been a prominent member of the United States Senate

A man of some wealth and a degree of influence in the community, was convicted on trial byer enormities having compelled her to ride astride of Instructions given in the Art, and a proficiency guaran- a horse some fifteen miles one night. In pronouncing the sentence of the Court, the Judge evidently labored under a powerful effort to keep down an expression of manly indignation against the brute. Nor were we dishonored in the fine arts : for a well-deserved meed was awarded to Hughes for his successful incorporation in marble of ideal Oliver Twist, and the palm was conferred on Powers for his immortal statue of the Greek Slave. When these successes had turned away the tide of derision from our country, the yacht America entered the Thames. Skilful architects saw that she combined, in before unknown proportions, the elements of grace and motion, and her modest challenge was reluctantly accepted, and even then only for a tenth part of the prize she proposed. The trial was graced by the presence of the Queen and her court, and watched with an interest created by national pride and ambition; and yet the triumph was complete.

In the very hour of this of itself conclusive demonstration of American superiority in utilitatrian inventions, and in the art "that leads to nautical dominion." further and irristible confirmation was given by the arrival of American clippers from India freighted at advanced rates with shipments, consigned by the agents of the East India Company at " Calcutta to their warehouses in London. Such and so recent are the proofs that, in the capital element of invention, we are equal to the contest for the su-
